

Fashion & Streetwear — Mini-Diagnostic Template

Purpose

This is a 2-4 page document sent to Tier 2 prospects: people who responded to the initial outreach and showed interest. It demonstrates that we understand their specific situation and gives them enough substance to justify a conversation.

Structure

Page 1: Cover

[Brand Name] — Brand Diagnostic

Prepared by Visiominds

[Date]

A one-line summary of the core observation:

"[Brand Name]'s product quality positions it as a premium fashion brand, but the current brand system does not consistently communicate that positioning to new audiences."

Page 2: What We Observed

Three to five specific observations about the brand. Each observation follows this format:

Observation: [What we noticed]

Where: [Website / Instagram / Packaging / Campaign / Storefront]

Why it matters: [The commercial implication]

Example observations for fashion brands:

1. Visual inconsistency across touchpoints.

The Instagram grid uses one visual language (moody, editorial), the website uses another (bright, product-catalogue), and the packaging uses a third (minimal, unbranded). A customer encountering the brand at different touchpoints would not immediately recognize it as the same brand.

2. Logo and identity do not signal the price point.

The current logo and typography feel generic relative to the product's positioning. Competitors at the same price point, such as [competitor], use identity systems that immediately communicate premium.

3. No brand guidelines or system.

The brand appears to be designed ad hoc, with each campaign or season creating its own visual direction. This is common in early-stage fashion brands but becomes limiting as the brand grows.

4. Website does not convert.

The ecommerce experience lacks the trust signals and visual quality expected at this price point. Product photography, page layout, and the checkout flow do not match the quality of the product itself.

5. Social content is strong but unsystematic.

The Instagram content is visually appealing, but there is no template system, no consistent caption structure, and no clear content strategy connecting posts to business objectives.

Page 3: The Opportunity

One paragraph framing the core opportunity. This is the diagnosis, not the prescription.

Example:

The opportunity is not to redesign individual touchpoints but to build a coherent brand system that communicates [Brand Name]'s actual market position consistently. The product quality is already there. The gap is between the product and the brand experience surrounding it. Closing that gap would make the brand's premium positioning immediately legible to new customers, strengthen perceived value, and create a scalable visual foundation for future collections and expansion.

Page 4: What This Could Look Like

A brief outline of what Visiominds would propose, framed as possibilities rather than a fixed scope:

Brand Strategy — Define the positioning, audience, and competitive differentiation clearly.

>

Identity System — Logo, typography, colour, and visual language that match the product's market position.

>

Digital Experience — Website or ecommerce presence that converts at a level consistent with the brand.

>

Campaign System — Templates and guidelines for social, editorial, and campaign content.

Close with a next step:

If this aligns with what you have been thinking about, we would be glad to walk through the full opportunity and discuss what an engagement could look like. We can set up a 30-minute call at your convenience.

Writing Rules

1. Every observation must reference something specific and real. Never write "your branding could be improved." Always write "the current logo typography does not communicate the same premium positioning as the product photography."
2. Do not promise revenue increases or specific business outcomes. Frame outcomes as "stronger perceived value," "clearer market positioning," "more consistent customer experience."
3. Keep the language confident and specific. Fashion founders respect taste and directness.
4. Do not oversell. The diagnostic should feel like a professional assessment, not a sales pitch.
5. Include at least one observation that the prospect might not have considered. That builds credibility.