Template A — Premium Positioning Gap

Subject (email): [Brand]'s products vs how the brand presents

Hi [Name],

I came across [Brand] and spent some time looking through your product range. The formulations and ingredient focus are clearly thought through.

What I noticed is that the brand presentation, the packaging, the website, and the social presence, does not yet signal the same level of quality as the product itself. In the beauty space, where perception drives purchase decisions more than almost any other category, that gap can be costly.

We run Visiominds, a brand and design studio in Lagos. We have worked with product-driven brands on closing exactly this kind of gap. Happy to share a few specific observations about [Brand] if you are open to it.

Template B — Packaging and Shelf Presence

Subject (email): A thought on [Brand]'s packaging

Hi [Name],

[Brand]'s product range caught my attention. The ingredient story is compelling and the reviews suggest real product quality.

One observation: the current packaging does not yet do the product justice. In beauty, packaging is the first brand interaction for most customers, whether on a shelf, in a delivery box, or in an Instagram flat-lay. When the packaging reads as mid-market but the product performs at a premium level, it creates friction.

We work with product brands on identity and packaging systems. Would you be interested in hearing what we noticed about [Brand]'s visual positioning? No pitch, just a few thoughts.

Template C — Ecommerce Experience

Subject (email): [Brand]'s online store experience

Hi [Name],

I went through [Brand]'s website as if I were a first-time customer. The products are strong and the ingredient transparency is a real differentiator.

The website experience, though, does not fully support the conversion. The product pages, the photography, and the overall layout could do more to communicate why [Brand] is worth the price point. In beauty ecommerce, the site is the storefront, and right now it does not match the level of the product inside the bottle.

We have worked on ecommerce experiences for product brands. Happy to share a few quick observations if you are interested.

Template D — New Launch / Expansion Trigger

Subject (email): Congrats on [new product / expansion]

Hi [Name],

Saw that [Brand] just [launched a new line / expanded to new retailers / hit a milestone]. That is a strong signal of growth.

In our experience, these moments are when brands benefit most from stepping back and asking whether the current identity and packaging system can carry the weight of the next phase. A system built for 5 products does not always scale to 15.

If you have been thinking about whether [Brand]'s visual identity is ready for what comes next, we would be happy to share our perspective. Short conversation, no deck.

Tier 1: Follow-Up Sequence

Follow-up 1 (4-5 days after initial message)

Hi [Name], following up briefly. I put together a few specific observations about [Brand]'s packaging and brand positioning. Would you like me to share them? Just bullet points, nothing heavy.

Follow-up 2 (5-7 days after follow-up 1)

Hi [Name], one more note. We recently completed a brand and packaging project for a product brand that had a similar challenge: strong product, packaging that did not match. The transformation in customer perception was immediate. Here is a quick look: [case study link]. If this resonates, we are happy to talk.

Follow-up 3 (7-10 days after follow-up 2, only if strong fit)

Hi [Name], last message from me. We genuinely think [Brand] has a strong product that deserves a stronger brand system. If timing is ever right, we are here. Keep building.

Common Pain Points in This Vertical

1. Packaging does not match product quality — The formulation is premium but the packaging looks generic or DIY.
2. No cohesive brand system — Each product or line has a different visual treatment.
3. Website does not convert — Poor product photography, weak copywriting, no trust signals.
4. Instagram-first, no brand foundation — Strong social following but no identity system, no guidelines, no scalable templates.
5. Competitor perception gap — Brands with inferior products present more polished identities and capture market share.
6. Scaling challenge — The brand system built for 3-5 products breaks down as the range expands.

Tone Notes

Beauty founders care deeply about aesthetics and customer perception. The outreach should demonstrate visual literacy and an understanding of how packaging and identity drive purchase decisions in this category. Avoid technical design jargon. Speak to the business impact of visual quality.
