Template A — Trust and Premium Positioning

Subject (email): How [Company]'s brand compares to the properties

Hi [Name],

I have been looking at [Company]'s developments and the properties are clearly positioned at a premium level. The locations, finishes, and pricing indicate a company targeting high-net-worth buyers.

What I noticed is that the brand presentation, the website, the marketing materials, and the social media, does not yet communicate that same level of sophistication. In real estate, where buyers are making the largest purchase decision of their lives, the brand is a trust signal. When the marketing looks mid-market but the properties are premium, it creates friction.

We run Visiominds, a brand and design studio in Lagos. We have worked with property companies on closing this kind of perception gap. Would you be open to a short conversation about what we observed?

Template B — Website and Digital Presence

Subject (email): [Company]'s website vs the properties you sell

Hi [Name],

I went through [Company]'s website as a prospective buyer would. The properties are impressive, but the website does not fully convey the experience of living in or investing in them.

The property photography, the layout, the information architecture, and the overall design could do more to build the trust and excitement that justifies the price points you are working with. Most property buyers today begin their search online, and the website is the first showing.

We work with property companies on brand and digital experience. Happy to share a few specific observations if you are interested.

Template C — New Development / Launch Trigger

Subject (email): [Development Name] launch

Hi [Name],

Congratulations on the launch of [development name]. The location and spec look strong.

For new developments, the marketing materials and brand presentation play a critical role in pre-sales and early buyer confidence, especially when the product does not yet exist physically. The renders, brochures, website, and brand identity become the product in the buyer's mind.

If you are looking to ensure the marketing matches the ambition of the development, we would be glad to share how we approach property branding. No pitch, just a conversation.

Template D — Marketing Collateral Quality

Subject (email): A thought on [Company]'s marketing materials

Hi [Name],

I came across [Company]'s latest marketing for [specific development or listing] and the properties are strong. The marketing materials, though, could be working harder.

The brochure design, the social media posts, and the overall visual presentation are functional but do not yet carry the level of sophistication that your target buyers expect from a company at this price point. In real estate, buyers judge the attention to detail in the marketing as a proxy for the attention to detail in the build.

We help property companies build marketing systems that match the quality of their developments. Would you like to hear a few specific observations?

Follow-Up Sequence

Follow-up 1 (4-5 days)

Hi [Name], following up on my message. I put together a few specific observations about how [Company]'s brand and digital presence compare to the quality of the properties. Would you like me to share them?

Follow-up 2 (5-7 days later)

Hi [Name], one more note. We recently completed a branding project for Mosun Homes, a property company that needed their marketing to match the premium nature of their developments. Here is a quick look: [case study link]. If this sounds relevant, happy to connect.

Follow-up 3 (7-10 days later)

Hi [Name], final message. The opportunity I noticed for [Company] is genuine, and I think addressing it would make a meaningful difference in buyer perception. If timing is ever right, we are here.

Common Pain Points

1. Brand does not match property quality — premium properties marketed with mid-market branding.
2. Website is a brochure, not an experience — static pages that do not convey the lifestyle or investment value.
3. Marketing materials are inconsistent — each development gets its own ad-hoc visual treatment.
4. No property marketing system — brochures, flyers, and social posts are created from scratch each time.
5. Pre-sales materials are weak — renders, brochures, and sales centre materials do not build buyer confidence.
6. Digital presence is behind competitors — competing developers present more polished brands and capture buyer attention first.

Tone Notes

Real estate prospects respond to authority and professionalism. The messaging should feel like it comes from a peer who understands property development and buyer psychology, not from a "creative agency." Emphasize trust, buyer confidence, and commercial impact. Avoid trendy language.
