Template A — Experience vs Brand Gap

Subject (email): [Brand]'s guest experience vs the brand presentation

Hi [Name],

I came across [Brand] and the property [or venue / service] looks genuinely well-done. The space, the attention to detail, and the reviews all point to a quality experience.

What I noticed is that the brand presentation, the website, the booking experience, and the social media, does not yet communicate that same level of care. In hospitality, the brand IS the first impression. Guests decide whether to book based on how the brand looks and feels online, before they ever walk through the door.

We run Visiominds, a brand and design studio in Lagos. We have worked with experience-driven businesses on aligning their brand with the quality of their offering. Would you be open to a quick conversation about what we noticed?

Template B — Booking and Digital Experience

Subject (email): [Brand]'s online booking experience

Hi [Name],

I went through [Brand]'s booking process as a potential guest would. The property looks great in the photos, but the website and booking flow do not fully convey the experience.

The photography could be more immersive, the layout does not build anticipation, and the booking process has friction points. For a hospitality brand, the website should feel like the beginning of the guest experience, not a transaction.

We work with hospitality brands on digital experience design. Happy to share a few specific observations if you are interested.

Template C — New Venue / Expansion

Subject (email): Congrats on [new venue / location / expansion]

Hi [Name],

Saw that [Brand] just [opened a new location / launched a new service / expanded]. That is a strong move.

New openings are often the right time to ensure the brand system can carry the weight of multiple locations or offerings. The identity that worked for one venue does not always translate cleanly across two or three.

If you have been thinking about whether [Brand]'s identity is ready to scale, we would be glad to share our perspective.

Template D — Events and Venue Branding

Subject (email): [Venue/Brand]'s visual identity

Hi [Name],

[Venue/Brand] clearly delivers a strong experience. The space and the programming are well-curated.

What I noticed is that the brand identity, the logo, the collateral, the signage, and the social presence, does not yet carry the same sophistication as the physical experience. When potential clients are choosing between venues, the brand is the first thing they evaluate, before they visit.

We help hospitality and events businesses build brands that match their physical experience. Interested in hearing a few thoughts?

Follow-Up Sequence

Follow-up 1 (4-5 days)

Hi [Name], following up briefly. I looked at [Brand]'s brand positioning relative to a few competitors and there is a clear opportunity. Would you like me to share what I found?

Follow-up 2 (5-7 days later)

Hi [Name], we recently completed a branding project for an experience-driven business where the physical experience was strong but the brand did not match. The difference in guest perception was significant. If this sounds relevant, happy to share more.

Follow-up 3 (7-10 days later)

Hi [Name], last note. The gap between [Brand]'s actual experience and how the brand presents online is real. If you ever want to address it, we are here.

Common Pain Points

1. Physical experience exceeds brand quality — the space is premium but the logo, website, and materials read as amateur.
2. Website does not inspire bookings — functional listing rather than an immersive preview of the experience.
3. No cohesive brand across touchpoints — signage says one thing, social says another, the menu says a third.
4. Photography is insufficient — phone photos or poor-quality images that do not capture the atmosphere.
5. Multi-venue inconsistency — each location looks like a different brand.
6. Events marketing is ad hoc — each event gets custom one-off design with no system.

Tone Notes

Hospitality founders care about guest experience and atmosphere. Speak their language: "guest perception," "booking confidence," "the experience begins online." Avoid generic agency talk.
