

Fintech & Financial Services — Full Proposal Template

Structure

01 — Why We Are Reaching Out

[Company]'s product has demonstrated clear value in [category]. After our conversation, it became clear that the brand and digital experience need to evolve to match the company's growth and the trust expectations of the market.

02 — What We Observed

- Brand identity — logo, typography, colour, and how the system performs across app, web, print, and marketing
- Website — trust signals, value proposition, conversion flow, content hierarchy, mobile experience
- App / product design alignment — visual consistency between the product UI and the marketing brand
- Marketing materials — sales decks, partner presentations, investor materials, one-pagers
- Content and social — LinkedIn, blog, educational content, thought leadership positioning
- Competitive positioning — brand and website comparison with 3-5 competitors
- Regulatory and trust signals — how licensing, security, and compliance are communicated

03 — The Business Implication

In fintech, every design decision is a trust decision. The brand, the website, and the app experience together determine whether a customer feels confident enough to sign up, deposit money, or recommend the product. When these touchpoints communicate reliability and professionalism, customer acquisition costs decrease, activation rates improve, and the company can compete with larger players on perception rather than only on product features.

04 — Our Hypothesis

[Company] has earned customer trust through product quality. The brand system has not kept pace. As the company scales to new customer segments and markets, the gap between product quality and brand perception becomes more costly. The opportunity is to build a brand that serves as a trust multiplier.
