

Entertainment & Media — Mini-Diagnostic Template

Structure

Page 1: Cover

[Brand/Company Name] — Brand Diagnostic

Prepared by Visiominds · [Date]

"[Company]'s creative output positions it as a leading voice in [category]. The brand system surrounding that output does not yet communicate the same level of ambition and quality."

Page 2: What We Observed

1. No cohesive company-level brand. Individual projects, events, or content may be well-recognised, but the company behind them lacks a unified visual identity. This limits the ability to leverage brand equity across projects.
2. Event or project branding is inconsistent. Each new release, event, or campaign creates its own visual direction from scratch. There is no system that allows rapid, high-quality execution while maintaining brand recognition.
3. Website does not serve as a platform. The digital presence is either absent, outdated, or does not function as a proper showcase for the company's work, talent, and capabilities.
4. Social media lacks visual system. Content is posted with variable quality and no template framework. Individual pieces may perform well, but the grid and overall presence do not build a cumulative brand impression.
5. Physical and experiential touchpoints are below standard. Merchandise, event materials, stage branding, signage, and promotional items do not match the creative quality of the content.

Page 3: The Opportunity

Entertainment and media brands compete on perception. The brand is not separate from the creative output; it is the frame that makes the work legible and memorable. A coherent brand system across digital, physical, and experiential touchpoints amplifies every piece of content, every event, and every release. It also strengthens positioning for sponsorships, partnerships, and new talent acquisition.

Page 4: What This Could Look Like

Brand Strategy — Positioning, audience definition, brand architecture (company vs. project brands)

>

Identity System — Logo, typography, colour, visual language, motion language

>

Digital Experience — Website as a showcase and platform

>

Event/Project Branding System — Templates and guidelines for rapid, consistent branding of new events, releases, and campaigns

>

Merchandise and Physical — Merch design, event materials, stage/venue branding

Next step:

30-minute call.