Tier 1: Cold DM / Email

Template A — Credibility Gap

Subject (email): [Brand]'s expertise vs how the brand presents

Hi [Name],

I came across [Brand/Institute/Academy] and the quality of the programmes and content is clear. The expertise behind the offering is genuine.

What I noticed is that the brand presentation, the website, the social media, and the marketing materials, does not yet communicate the same level of authority and credibility as the programmes themselves. In education and training, where clients are investing in their careers or their teams, the brand is a trust signal. When the brand reads as informal but the education is serious, potential students or clients may undervalue what you offer.

We run Visiominds, a brand and design studio in Lagos. We work with knowledge-driven businesses on building brands that match their expertise. Would you be open to a short conversation about what we observed?

Template B — Digital Experience and Conversion

Subject (email): [Brand]'s website and enrollment experience

Hi [Name],

I went through [Brand]'s website as a potential student or client would. The programmes are compelling and the instructor credentials are strong.

The challenge is that the website does not make it easy to understand the full offering, compare options, or commit. The programme descriptions, the enrollment flow, and the overall design could do more to convert interest into action. For education businesses, the website is the primary enrollment tool, and right now it does not match the quality of what you teach.

We work with education and service businesses on digital experience. Happy to share a few specific thoughts.

Template C — New Programme / Expansion

Subject (email): [Brand]'s brand for the next phase

Hi [Name],

Saw that [Brand] recently [launched a new programme / expanded to corporate training / opened a new location / launched online courses]. Strong move.

Growth moments like this often reveal gaps in the brand system. The identity that worked for a single programme or location may not carry the weight of a broader offering. Potential clients evaluating multiple options will default to the provider that presents with the most authority and clarity.

If you have been thinking about whether [Brand]'s identity is ready for the expansion, we would be glad to share our perspective.

Template D — Corporate Training / B2B

Subject (email): [Brand]'s brand for corporate clients

Hi [Name],

[Brand]'s training programmes are strong. The content quality and the results for participants are evident.

If you are selling to corporate clients or HR departments, the brand and marketing materials become even more important. Decision-makers in these organisations expect a level of visual professionalism that signals reliability and seriousness. The current brand, while functional, may not be meeting that standard.

We help education and training businesses build brands that perform in corporate conversations. Interested in a few specific observations?

Follow-Up Sequence

Follow-up 1 (4-5 days)

Hi [Name], following up briefly. I put together a few observations about [Brand]'s brand positioning and digital presence. Would you like me to share?

Follow-up 2 (5-7 days later)

Hi [Name], we recently worked with a knowledge-driven business on aligning their brand with the quality of their expertise. The shift in how new clients perceived them was immediate. If this resonates, happy to share more.

Follow-up 3 (7-10 days later)

Hi [Name], last message. The opportunity for [Brand] is genuine. If timing is ever right, we are here.

Common Pain Points

1. Brand does not match expertise — the teaching is expert-level but the brand looks like a small side project.
2. Website does not convert — potential students cannot easily understand the offering, compare programmes, or enroll.
3. No cohesive brand system — each programme, course, or service has its own visual treatment.
4. Marketing materials are unprofessional — flyers, social posts, and brochures are Canva-level when the content is premium.
5. Corporate-readiness gap — the brand does not present at the level needed for B2B or corporate training sales.
6. Online course presentation — course platforms and landing pages do not convey the value of the content.

Tone Notes

Education and training founders are experts in their domain. They care about credibility, authority, and student outcomes. Frame brand quality as a credibility mechanism that supports enrollment and corporate partnerships. Respect their expertise. Avoid patronising language.
