Visiominds Outreach Templates — By Vertical

How to use these:

- Replace [Name], [Brand], [specific detail] before sending — never send a template without personalising it
 - The [specific detail] should be something you actually noticed on their page: a post, a product, a caption, a recent launch
 - Always observe something real before reaching out. The goal is to feel like timing, not a mass blast
 - Wait 5 days before following up. One follow-up only.

01. FASHION & STREETWEAR

The core pain: Their design instincts are sharp. Their brand infrastructure — the system that holds everything together across website, packaging, lookbooks, social — doesn't match the quality of the actual work. They're producing at a certain level and being perceived at a lower one.

Instagram DM

[Name], your [recent collection / that post with the [specific detail]] — the design sensibility is genuinely strong.

>

The gap I keep seeing with brands like [Brand] isn't the work. It's that the brand system around the work doesn't communicate at the same level. The website, the visual language, how it holds together across touchpoints — it all lags behind what the pieces themselves are saying.

>

That gap is the difference between being a label people admire and one they invest in.

>

We're Visiominds — we build brand systems for fashion labels that match the quality of the work inside them. Would it be worth 15 minutes?

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — following up on my message. Completely understand if now isn't the right time.

>

One thought I'll leave with you: the brands in your space that are getting international attention aren't always doing better work. They just look like they are.

>

When you're ready to close that gap, we're here.

02. BEAUTY & PERSONAL CARE

The core pain: Premium product, market-stall level branding. Their ingredient story is strong, their results are real — but the packaging and visual identity are quietly telling customers this is a ■2,000 product, not a ■9,000 one. They're competing on price when they should be commanding it.

Instagram DM

[Name] — your [product name / the results your customers are sharing] — it's clear you've built something with real care.

>

The problem is your branding is pricing you into a conversation with brands that cost a fraction of what yours is worth.

>

The packaging, the visual identity, the way [Brand] presents online — none of it communicates the quality inside the bottle. That's not a product problem. That's a brand problem. And it's costing you every day.

>

We're Visiominds. We've helped product brands close the gap between what they actually are and what their brand says they are — so they can charge premium and be believed.

>

Worth 15 minutes?

Follow-up (Day 5)

Quick follow-up, [Name].

>

The brands getting onto retail shelves and into the premium conversation aren't always the best formulations. They're usually the best packaged.

>

Whenever you're ready to build that side of [Brand], we'd love to be involved.

03. FOOD & BEVERAGE

The core pain: Great product, terrible packaging. They're trying to get into retail or justify premium pricing, but the brand looks like it was made the same weekend as the product. Retailers look at packaging first. Customers buy packaging, then taste.

Instagram DM

[Name] — the response to your [product / the posts showing your [specific detail]] makes it clear there's real demand here.

>

The honest challenge: the packaging and branding you have right now will lose you a retail conversation before it starts. Buyers at [Shoprite / health stores / premium delis] make decisions in seconds, and [Brand] isn't dressed for the room yet.

>

We help food brands build the visual identity and packaging that get them off Instagram and onto shelves.

>

15 minutes — worth it?

Email Version

Subject: [Brand] — the product is ready. The packaging isn't.

Hi [Name],

>

I've been following [Brand] and the community you've built around it. The product clearly speaks for itself.

>

I want to be direct: the brand and packaging you have now will limit where [Brand] can go. Retail buyers, premium stockists, and the customers who pay ■[X] for a quality product make their first decision visually — and right now, [Brand] isn't communicating at the level it deserves.

>

At Visiominds, we build brand identities and packaging systems for Nigerian food and beverage brands that are ready to move beyond social media.

>

Would you be open to a 15-minute conversation?

>

— Visiominds Team hello@visiominds.com | wa.me/2347031783580

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — just following up.

>

The product is clearly doing the work. The question is whether the brand is doing its job — which is to get people to pick it up before they ever taste it.

>

When you're ready to have that conversation, we're here.

04. HEALTH & WELLNESS

The core pain: They're offering premium services — ■50K/month memberships, high-end wellness packages — but their brand communicates community center. Their ideal clients (who can actually afford premium) don't take them seriously enough because the brand doesn't signal that level.

Instagram DM

[Name], what you're building with [Brand] is clearly resonating — the content, the community you've built.

>

One thing I notice: the visual identity doesn't match the level of service you're clearly delivering. For the clients who can pay what [Brand] is worth — the people who spend on their wellness seriously — the brand is the first filter they use to decide who's worth their time.

>

[Brand] deserves to be in that first conversation.

>

We're Visiominds. We help wellness brands build identities that attract the clients they actually want.

>

15 minutes?

Follow-up (Day 5)

Following up, [Name].

>

The right clients for what you're offering exist in Lagos. They're just scrolling past [Brand] because the visual doesn't stop them.

>

That's a solvable problem. Reach out when you're ready.

05. REAL ESTATE

The core pain: They're marketing ■50M–■500M properties using Canva flyers, a phone number as a logo, and no website. High-value buyers and serious developers judge credibility before they judge listings. The brand is costing them mandates.

Instagram DM

[Name] — the listings you're moving are serious. The brand around them isn't keeping up.

>

When someone is buying a ■[X]M property, their first question is whether they trust you. That question gets answered before they even call — it's answered by how [Brand] looks online, on the flyer, everywhere.

>

Right now [Brand] is moving premium properties with a brand that reads entry-level. That gap is costing you mandates and commissions to agents who just look more established.

>

We help real estate professionals build brands that match the level of the deals they're closing.

>

Worth a conversation?

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — quick follow-up.

>

The agents winning the most exclusive mandates in Lagos right now aren't necessarily the best agents. They look like the most authoritative ones.

>

Whenever you're ready to build that, we'd love to talk.

06. HOSPITALITY (Boutique Hotels, Short-Lets, Venues)

The core pain: They're charging ■150K–■500K/night but the brand — logo, website, Instagram aesthetic — looks like a ■30K guesthouse. First impressions live online now. Their Airbnb listing, their Instagram page, their Google profile — that's the lobby before the lobby.

Instagram DM

[Name] — the space itself looks exceptional.

>

The honest gap: someone paying ■[X]/night for [Brand] is making that decision online, before they ever arrive. What they see on Instagram, on your listing, on Google — that's your first impression. And right now, the brand isn't matching the physical experience you're clearly delivering.

>

You're losing bookings to properties that look more premium — not because they are, but because they look like they are.

>

We build hospitality brands that make the online impression match the real thing.

>

15 minutes?

Email Version

Subject: [Brand] — the experience is there. The brand needs to catch up.

Hi [Name],

>

I came across [Brand] and can see the quality of what you've built. The space, the details, the experience.

>

The challenge is that your ideal guests — the ones who will pay ■[X]/night without hesitation — are making their decision before they arrive. They're on Instagram, on your listing, on Google. And what they see right now doesn't match what they'd actually experience.

>

At Visiominds, we help hospitality businesses build visual identities that communicate the right level before the guest even packs a bag.

>

Would you be open to a quick call?

— Visiominds Team

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — following up.

>

Every night you're not at full occupancy at the price you want, part of the problem is the brand. It's the quickest lever.

>

Reach out when you're ready.

07. TECH STARTUPS

The core pain: Developer-built visual identity, generic SaaS aesthetic, indistinguishable from 10 competitors. They have a real product solving a real problem but the brand doesn't build the trust they need for conversion — especially in Nigeria where trust is the currency.

LinkedIn Message

Hi [Name],

>

I've been looking at what [Company] is building — the problem you're solving for [target market] is real and clearly needed.

>

One thing I notice: the brand doesn't yet communicate the level of trust the product deserves. In the Nigerian market specifically, where users are making a decision about whether to trust a product with their money / data / business — the visual identity is doing a lot of the trust work before anyone reads a single feature.

>

[Company]'s brand right now is indistinguishable from 10 other tools in your space. That's a conversion problem.

>

At Visiominds, we've helped Nigerian tech products build visual identities that communicate credibility and move users from skeptical to confident.

>

Would a 20-minute conversation make sense?

Email Version

Subject options:

- [Company] — the product is strong. The brand isn't doing it justice.
- Your brand is working against your conversion rate
- A thought on [Company]'s positioning

Hi [Name],

>

I've been following [Company] since [specific moment — funding announcement / product launch / article]. What you're building for [target users] is exactly what the market needs.

>

Direct observation: the brand — the visual identity, the website, the way [Company] presents — is generic enough that it's not building the trust your product actually deserves. In Nigeria, where trust is the primary conversion lever for any financial or business product, that matters more than almost anything else.

>

At Visiominds, we specialise in helping Nigerian tech products build brands that communicate authority and trust — so the first impression does the work before the demo does.

>

I'd love 20 minutes. Are you available [specific day]?

— [Name] Visiominds | hello@visiominds.com

Follow-up (Day 5)

Hi [Name] — following up on my note about [Company]'s brand.

>

Quick thought to leave with you: in your category, the product that wins long-term is rarely the most technically superior one. It's usually the one users trust first. Brand is how you manufacture trust before the product proves itself.

>

Happy to talk whenever it makes sense.

08. E-COMMERCE

The core pain: Strong product with growing demand but the brand is generic. They're competing on price because the brand creates no differentiation. Repeat purchase rates are low because there's no identity to be loyal to.

Instagram DM

[Name] — the response to [specific product / recent post] makes it clear the product is doing the work.

>

The question I'd ask: why aren't more of those customers coming back — and telling others?

>

Most of the time with product brands, the answer is that the brand isn't giving people anything to be loyal to. The product is good but the identity is generic — there's nothing distinct enough to remember, to share, to feel like part of something.

>

We build product brand identities that create repeat buyers and word-of-mouth — not just first purchases.

>

Worth exploring?

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — following up.

>

One thing I'll leave you with: the margin difference between a commodity product and a branded one isn't the product. It's the brand. When you're ready to build that side of [Brand], we're here.

09. PROFESSIONAL SERVICES (Consulting, Law, Finance)

The core pain: Highly competent people with a website that looks like a free template from 2017. They're losing mandates and retainers to firms that look more established — not because they are, but because they look like they are. The brand is costing them credibility before they even get in the room.

LinkedIn Message

Hi [Name],

>

I've read some of your work / followed your thinking on [specific topic] — the depth and clarity is genuinely impressive.

>

Direct observation: the brand around [Company] — the website, the visual identity, how the firm presents — doesn't match the calibre of what you actually deliver. When a prospective client Googles [Company] before their first meeting, the brand is making a first impression that undersells you.

>

In professional services, the brand is doing trust-building work before you ever get in the room. Right now [Company]'s brand is working against you.

>

At Visiominds, we build brand identities for professional service firms that communicate authority from the first click.

>

Would a 20-minute conversation be useful?

Email Version

Subject options:

- [Company] — your expertise deserves a better first impression
- A thought on how [Company] is presenting online
- Your brand isn't keeping up with your work

Hi [Name],

>

I came across [Company] through [specific context — article / post / LinkedIn] and was struck by the quality of thinking you bring to [area of expertise].

>

One candid observation: the brand — the website, the visual identity, how the firm presents — creates a first impression that doesn't match that quality. Clients who don't know you yet are making a judgement before they read a word of what you've written.

>

In professional services, the brand is the handshake before the handshake. Right now, yours isn't doing justice to the firm behind it.

>

We help professional service firms build identities that make the right first impression.

>

Would a 20-minute call be worth your time?

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — one follow-up.

>

The firms winning the mandates you should be winning aren't always sharper. They often just look more authoritative. The good news is that's entirely fixable.

>

Reach out when the timing is right.

10. ENTERTAINMENT & CREATIVE

The core pain: Growing artist, growing audience — but the visual identity is fragmented across platforms, the merch looks like it came from a print shop, and the brand isn't landing brand deals because it doesn't look like a brand. The music/content is doing the work; the brand isn't.

Instagram DM

[Name] — the [specific song / recent project / episode] — the level is there.

>

One thing that's holding back the next chapter: the brand around the work isn't keeping up with the work itself. The visual identity across platforms, the way [Brand/Name] presents as an entity — it's fragmented in a way that costs you brand deals, licensing opportunities, and the perception that makes bigger rooms possible.

>

The artists and creatives who cross over from good to iconic aren't always the most talented. They're usually the most intentional about how they look.

>

We build creative identities for artists and entertainment brands who are ready to operate at a bigger level.

>

Worth a conversation?

Follow-up (Day 5)

[Name] — following up.

>

The brand deals, the partnerships, the bigger stages — they're decisions made by people who see the brand before they hear the music. Whenever you're ready to build that piece, we'd love to be involved.

GENERAL RULES ACROSS ALL TEMPLATES

Before you send:

- [] Have you replaced every placeholder with something real and specific?
- [] Does the opening reference something you actually saw on their page?
- [] Is the pain observation accurate — are they actually showing these signals?
- [] Have you checked their name is spelled correctly?

What never to do:

- Don't send the same template to two people in a row without personalising it
- Don't lead with "We are a creative agency that..."
- Don't attach a portfolio unsolicited — offer a call first
- Don't chase more than once per prospect (one follow-up only)
- Don't send via WhatsApp unless you've had prior Instagram interaction

After they respond:

The only goal of the first message is to get a 15-minute call.

The only goal of the call is to do a brand audit and surface one real problem.

The only goal of the audit is to show them you understand their world better than they do.

The proposal comes after all of that.
